

“Helping Communities Help Themselves”

The 2009 Nebraska Grazing Conference

The Nebraska Great Plains RC&D council worked to promote and support the annual Nebraska Grazing Conference in Kearney NE on August 11th and 12th, 2009. This statewide conference is planned by people involved in the state’s livestock grazing industry, as well as public and private sector environmentalists, to present the most current information on livestock grazing systems and their impact on grazing lands in Nebraska. The conference features grazing specialists from multiple states, as well as experienced livestock managers and producers from Nebraska. These presentations provided even the most experienced land managers with strategies to increase profits from their grazing lands.

Quality grazing land is important to Nebraska’s economy.

Quality water sources are imperative for proper grazing distribution.

Sheep graze on a pasture in eastern Nebraska

