

Antique Critique Show & Tell

This new 2010 event, Antique Critique Show & Tell, was not only educational, but unique and fun too. Fifty people from 23 communities brought in their special heirloom items to be evaluated. The three goals for doing the project were met:

- Citizens gained an a new appreciation of the antiques they possess and their possible value
- Antique dealers got to see more of what's out there in case they're interested in purchasing some for collections or to enhance their business offerings
- The RC&D Council got their name out there in another way and raised some funds for the operation of the organization

Highest valued item at $2000—a porcelain figurine of two oxen and a boy

An old-time spinning wheel had special value for the participant

This project addresses one of the RC&D priorities of Self-Sustaining Communities by working with local citizens, supporting community projects, and utilizing the talents of citizens through volunteerism

Great volunteer workers made for a successful event
