“Sevier Valley Students Learning Center Resources for Navajo Curricula”

This project has assisted the Native American youth in Sevier County with computer access and technology needs. Sophie Addison presented a project before the Panoramaland RC&D Council on April 2, 2009. She was looking for a partner to help put together a Native American Learning Center. She wanted to focus on students that currently did not have this education environment and resources available to them in the evenings. This center would focus on the needs of Native American students who did not have access to computers and the Internet at home. She asked the RC&D council for any help they could provide coordinating this effort.

The space for the lab is being provided by the Richfield City Library. Computers were secured, and funding for a coordinator was granted. This coordinator will help the Native American youth with computer usage and educate them on technology. Panoramaland RC&D, USU Extension, and Richfield City Library partnered to accomplish this great resource for Native American youth in Sevier County.
